Asociación de Organizaciones Comunitarias para la Reforma Ahora
Comunicaciones

The right to communicate is fundamental. The increasing concentration of ownership in communication industries ensures that, unless positive steps are taken, the concerns of low- and moderate-income people will continue to be ignored.

I. Make it possible for low- and moderate-income community groups to have their own sources of information

A. Initiate government funding to low- and moderate-income community groups in order to assist them in establishing their own sources of information.

B. Exempt government funding to low- and moderate-income community groups in order to assist them in establishing their own sources of information.

C. The Federal Communication Commission should revise its policies so that broadcast applicants with low- and moderate-income boards of directors are more likely to be awarded stations.

II. Make the mainstream media accessible and accountable to low- and moderate-income people.

A. Reinstate the Fairness Doctrine in broadcasting, so that grass roots community groups have equal time to express their views.

B. Require cable TV companies to make good on their promises to allow community groups access to air time, or revoke their operating licenses.
